STUDIES.

In the College there are four Classes: the Freshman, Sophomore, Junior and Senior. The time spent by students in each class, is ordinarily one year.

To enter the Freshman Class, a student must be able to translate and parse Virgil and the select Orations of Cicero, in the Latin; and in Greek, to read Collectanea Græca Minora.

The Freshman year is employed in reading, in Latin, Sallust and Horace, and in Greek, Collectanea Græca Majora and Roman Antiquities; together with the study of Arithmetick and Geography, two important branches, in which few of our students, on coming to us, are sufficiently versed.

The Sophomores read, in Latin, Terence and Tacitus; in Greek, Græca Majora—and study Algebra, Euclid and Logic.

The Juniors read in Latin, Cicero de Oratore, and in Greek, Homer's Iliad, and study Trigonometry—Plane, Oblique, Analytical and Spherical; Mensuration, Navigation, Surveying and Conic Sections, Rhetoric, the Evidences of Christianity, and Philosophy Natural and Moral.

The Seniors study Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, Philosophy of the Mind, Elements of Criticism, and review their whole course.

In addition to these studies, the afternoon of every Wednesday is devoted to exercises in declamation and the writing of composition. Each student delivers an oration and exhibits a composition, once in two weeks.

There are two vacations, one in the fall, of six weeks, and one in spring of four, making two terms in each year.

Tuition in the College is $10 a term, paid in advance. In the Academy it is $7 50.

The students are furnished (without expense) with rooms in College, in which they lodge. Their bedding, fire wood and candles, may be procured for a sum not exceeding $10 per annum.

The price of boarding (washing included) varies from $1 00 to $1 50 per week.

The Latitude of Athens is about $39^{\circ} 12'$. The surrounding country is broken, well watered, and such as affords the fairest prospect of health. The village contains about 800 inhabitants, and certainly affords to youth, as few temptations to vice, as any place of its population in the United States.

The Ohio University was established, to afford to the youth of our country a liberal education, and pursuant to this end it is now conducted: mere English scholars are nevertheless admitted, and allowed to pursue any branch of study for which they are qualified.
